The bulk of the evidence taken went to show that the people of Zabern, irritated by the action of the regiment, had expressed their irritation by the manifestation of a certain amount of amusement at the conduct of the troops. This seems to have provoked the colonel and his officers into some amazing actions.

From evidence of regimental officers it is clear that people were arrested repeatedly because they were suspected of laughing or smiling. On one occasion three boys who whistled as a regiment was passing were arrested and imprisoned with some other offenders in a coal cellar.

FRENCH PRESS TAKES NOTICE OF ZABERN CASE

Special Cable to the Monitor from its European Bureau

PARIS-The French press, which was at first reticent respecting the Affaire Saverne is, as court-martial proceedings are reported, beginning to take more notice of the incident. The fight which is going on in the Strassburg court the Temps declares is typical of the struggle between the civil courts and the sword and is the outcome of violent Pan-Germanism generated by union of the barracks and the university.

The incident, from the French point of view, finds additional piquancy in the so-called revelations of telegrams of the crown prince, an incident of which, it must be admitted, there is nothing but been the exclusion temporarily, partially the frailest evidence.

Far Has Seemed to Be Incapable of an Adjustment

LITTLE HOPE IS SEEN

LONDON-There seems to be no doubt that negotiations over the Irish home rule bill have for the time being failed. Those who are most in the counsels of Ulster leaders make little secret of the fact.

The point at issue, which has all along or otherwise, of Ulster, has proved so far incapable of arrangement, nor does there seem much probability that this difficulty will be overcome before the meeting of Parliament. At the same time it is certainly unwise to declare, as there is tendency to do, that the gulf Mouday in the presence of the Emperor Master House Painters and Decorators

At present the reports concerning his transfer are entirely premature, but in the natural course of events he will receive promotion on account of his services to the state, though in what form that promotion will be granted has not yet been decided.

Referring to the subject of free trade the speaker pointed out that Mr. Bonar Law had recently stated that if Conservatives were in power in the next Parliament they would impose a tariff not exceeding an average of 10 per cent on manufactured goods for revenue purposes. Free traders were asked to believe in this new scheme as a means of securing imperial preference. He hoped that when Austen Chamberlain came to Manchester he would find it possible to tell them' whether he thought imperial preference could be effectively established on the pasis of a tariff on manufactured goods. "At first I was refused an answer. I Mr. Chamberlain was known to be a very such system as that of Mr. Bonar Law.

Free traders opposed the new version determinedly as they opposed the old. They opposed it because it involved an immense disturbance of the basis of British trade without any corresponding advantages. Whilst it pretended to confer imperial preference upon the Dominions it did nothing of the kind. They opposed it because it would be found when it was examined not to produce a revenue in the

Mr. Barklie's purpose is to inquire which of the above conflicting conclusions is right, or whether any one of them is entirely right in itself. After pointing out that the best known document having any bearing on the Rhodesian land question is of course, the charter constituting the British South African Company and specifying its powers, Mr. Barklie points out that this charter ultimately rests upon concessions, and that, in order to ascertain the exact position of the land in Rhodesia, it is necessary to understand the nature of these concessions.

First amongst these he places what is known as the "Rudd concession," a concession which was entered into by Messrs. Rudd, Maguire and Thompson, the emissaries of Cecil Rhodes, with the Matebele King Lo Bengula. Summarizing the Rudd concession, Mr. Barklie points out what it is, (a) not a grant of land, (b) but merely a charge on minerals and a right to work the same, (d) liable to forfeiture. But the Rudd Caxton hall, to discuss a scheme for year. concession, Mr. Barklie continues, was amalgamating all the postal servants asthe foundation, however fragile, of the charter.

A petition was presented to Queen Victoria in council, and on Oct. 29, 1889. the desired charter was granted, incorporating the petitioners under the style of the British South Africa Company. Mink Furs

There has never been a period during the civilized history of the human race in the northern climates when mink furs have not stood for elegance, richness, style and value, and rightly they should, for in the first place the fur itself is beautiful, and as far as durability goes, nothing else compares with it, it lasts practically for a generation, and a good piece of mink fur is an excellent investment.

Karacul-Persian Lamb

Experience has proven that furs like baby lamb, broadtail and karacul in the rich, beautiful blacks have seldom varied in price. It was with regret and reluctance on the part of the manufacturer that these furs had to be included in this purchase.

Fur coats of an elegance and distinction in style unsurpassed, in workmanship rarely equaled, and in quality the highest-magnificent coats of the fashionable karacul and persian lamb.

That there is too much "red tape" connected with book borrowing from public libraries is the theme of an editorial in Library Occurrent, which argues the case in this wise: If you want to borrow a book from the loan collection of a big store, you can get it by giving your name. No questions are asked. If you want to buy something at a department store and have it charged until the first of the month, you are asked if you have an account elsewhere, or for a reference. Frequently you can avoid even that questioning if you will identify yourself by a letter and the city directory. But if you want to borrow a book from the public library, some librarians will make you go out and get a taxpayer or property owner to sign your card and guarantee that you will not steal the books you borrow. To be sure, the rules that require a guarantor and other similar rules have always been made with good intentions, but, as the public sometimes thinks, with the aim of keeping the books from the people. But is it not reasonable to suppose that our good intentions may have us astray when we find our library rules so much more restricted than are those of business concerns?

"The only course in library administration and public service given in the world is offered now by the library school of the Wisconsin library commission in cooperation with the University of Wisconsin." Following this statement in the Press Bulletin of the university comes an explanation of why the course was established and a description of what the course includes. The account says: "A demand has arisen for librarians who have a knowledge of political science and economics. Men versed in these subjects are peculiarly fitted for work of this nature.

"The object of library administration and public service is to meet the demand for library workers in a field where knowledge of subject is of greater importance than a preliminary mastery of library technique. The course in library methods is offered only in connection with studies to be pursued in the university and cannot be taken separately. In these days a week seems too long the Panama canal. The division has to wait for the news, even the local and home news. Facilities for the publication of a local daily are so ready that it it has come to take the place of the weekly in towns of moderate size, even n New England. It is not so certain that the town has gained in the change. Comparison in the quality of some of the local evening papers with the weekly that they have supplanted would be convincing that quality had given way to quantity. The old name has been too often transferred from a cleanly printed, tee at its annual meeting last night carefully edited newspaper, the pride of its publisher and the friend of its steady reader, to a sheet that carries no other sign of progress than haste, in which the finer qualities that are developed in Albert L. garments is the cape. It has been many a season since the sleeveless mantle was considered smart, though the more conservative women have always persisted in wearing it. There is very little in common, however, between the shapeless, Quakerlike cape of the past and the charming draped garment of today, says the Indianapolis News. One side of the cape may hang straight, but the other falls in an effective rippling line that is unmistakably new. And the touch of fur is not forgotten, for though there are no sleeves to cuff, a scarf is to be twisted around the neck, with long ends to hang quite to the bottom of the garment.

The fur cloak is always in good taste as a theater wrap and the newest models show the flare in the skirt or are caught in snugly below the knees to the figure, not only by manipulations of the drapery, but are actually held in to the figure by the hand. Like those of the metallic brocaded wraps, the linings are remarkably beautiful.

About 250 bankers and bank employees heard his argument that a reserve bank in New York should not be so powerful as a number of banks smaller than eight would make it.

Although Professor Sprague said one argument for the larger number was that it would keep New York from serving such a large area as it seeks. He said it was practically out of the question for the New York bank area to include New York state, the New England states and some states beyond, because not only would the New York bank be vastly larger, but also many of the areas would be contracted.

HESE new models mark a further advance in the art of figure-reduction with utmost comfort. A newly-patented invention is the arrangement of the elastic reducing bands at the back. These are attached to the corset-body only at one end, being detached at the lacing ends. When laced, the two upper eyelets in the elastic bands are laced through with the two lower eyelets in the corset. This permits the lower part of the elastic extensions to be laced more closely, forming a complete "incurve."

GOVERNOR FINDS STATE TROOPS' RECORD CLEAR

Executive in Round of Personal Inquiry in Copper Region Discredit Misbehavior Reports

CLAIM LAW ENFORCED

HOUGHTON, Mich.-Gov. Woodbridge N. Ferris in his round of investigation here, now on-its second day, has gained much information on conditions in this region, where copper miners have been on strike since July 23. Especially the Governor learned about the number of county and company deputies, their character and classification, in the strike zone. That there are only four so-called 'gunmen" in the county's employment was the answer of Sheriff Cruse to the Governor's inquiry. The Governor went into reports that the state troops had misbehaved, but each official said he had no eriticisms to make of the soldiers. The Governor obtained information Tuesday from the sheriffs, prosecuting attorneys and supervisors of the two counties affected by the industrial dispute. At the conclusion of his sessions with these officials he impressed upon Hearne, detached navy yard, New York, them that they must work together in Second Lieut. E. S. Blackwell, Jr., fifth N. Y., to accounting officer, Lavy yard, maintaining law and order and in protecting persons and property.

The sheriff assured the Governor that the law against carrying concealed weapons was being enforced. The Governor has now made, an appointment to meet representatives of the Western Federation of Minera in interviews. These men probably will be followed by delegations from local unions. The mine managers had a partial innings Tuesday.

GLENS FALLS WOMAN'S CLUB BUYS HOUSE AND PROPERTY

Active Organization Extends Educational and Cultural Program Through Acquirement Former Academy Building

PLANS MANY CLASSES

GLENS FALLS, New York-This gateway of the Adirondack region, beside being an active and progressive business center, is giving much thought to civic reform and is deeply interested in art, music and education.

The Woman's Club of Glens Falls, which is an important factor in promoting these several lines of study and community advancement, has just purchased a fine property, including a building centrally located for use as a club house and general assembly hall. The club has planned an active winter of study, with lectures and musicals which, with its new home, will make for the growth of the city along educational and cultural lines. Already Ernest Harold Baynes, a naturalist of world-wide fame, has spoken before the club, while the Misses Fuller, three English girls, recently gave a program of English, Irish and Scottish folk song.

Early in January Prof. Alfred H Brown will address the organization on the suffrage question. He will be fol- zation the former club stands sponsor. lowed on Feb. 4 by the Rev. and Mrs. William Brewster Humphrey, who will tell of the "Indians in song and art." Following a program in Bates hall, consisting of motion pictures and xylophone selections by Mr. Runey, addresses were made by George W. Mehaffey, general secretary, and Frank P. Speare, director of education.

The visitors were then taken through the building. The inspection brought forth many expressions of approval from the guests, who were much impressed with the building's splendid equipment and the thorough provision made in every department for what will best serve the interests and welfare of the members.

The invitation, as Mr. Mehaffey pointed out in his remarks, had been given because of a desire on the part of the Y. M. C. A. to continue the cooperation which had always existed between their association and the Publishing Society. Now that the two had become not only friends but neighbors it was the wish of the Y. M. C. A., he said, to extend to their friends "across the way" such hospitality as befitted an organization that had cooperated with them from the first.

Mr. Mehaffey's welcome was seconded by Mr. Speare, who told briefly of what Y. M. C. A. work stands for, summarized its present extent and influence, and

FRIENDS,

May We Introduce You to Each Other

The Reader

Every reader of the Monitor has a 66 purchasing power" which is inexorably expending itself daily. Certain fixed wants are being supplied; clothes, travel, food, houses, ornamentation, instruction, entertainment, are being purchased and all the ramifications of a busy life lead Monitor readers into all kinds of legitimate business places each day. This "purchasing power" possesses the ability to reward the honest, conscientious merchant who is trying to carry on business on high lines. It has great economic power when intelligently and thoughtfully directed. The total "purchasing power" of Monitor readers is immense. It will, if directed to those advertisers whose standards are high, so richly reward them that they will be quick to recognize the value of Monitor publicity, and want more of it. Thus the Monitor becomes of distinct service to its readers, in that it introduces them and their high-class wants to the advertisers of equally high-class ability to supply these wants. ; recognizes the unquestioned high character of the readers of the Monitor. He keys his business to a high pitch of service and satisfaction in order to make it worthy. He takes space in the Monitor to invite its readers to examine his offerings, quite certain in his own thought that he has succeeded in securing merchandise, or investment opportunities, or real estate, which is distinctly worth while. He realizes that in the Monitor he is asked to compete only with honest, legitimate business firms. He knows his announcement will not appear on a page with those of objectionable, illegitimate businesses. He knows that could the policy of the Monitor be applied to all forms of publicity, it would be impossible for any dishonest or criminal business to secure advertising. Therefore the advertiser, as well as the reader, is interested in upbuilding clean newspapers. The aims of both being the same; the reader and the advertiser should become acquainted, and the Monitor is the mutual friend to bring them together.

This is cooperation of the type the Monitor believes will be beneficial to both buyer and seller. If the "purchasing power" now expended daily by Monitor readers could be directed to Monitor advertisers (price, quality and other considerations being equal) the desires both parties have for Clean Journalism and Clean Business would more quickly be realized.

This is why we earnestly hope Monitor readers will make themselves acquainted with Monitor advertisers, and the Monitor considers itself fortunate in possessing such loyal and large bodies of friends in the ranks of buyers and sellers.

LOS ANGELES CITY MARKETS SUCCESSFUL

Fifteen Hundred Producers Sell Their Foodstuffs at the Eleven Municipal Marts During One Month, According to Report

LOS ANGELES, Cal.-This city's municipal markets have been a great success and four of the 11 markets established during the year served their patrons three time a week with garden and farm produce, says the Tribune. What have come to be termed the permanent markets are located at Selma and Cahuenga, Hollywood; Fourth and Breed, Forty-eighth and Vermont and Manitou and Daly. Two of these markets have been enclosed and the other two also are to be provided with sheds WYOMA DISTRICT and stalls.

Plans, now under way, call for 24 markets, and it is expected the additional 13 will be opened within a short time.

During November, according to a LYNN, Mass.—Erection of a 16-room O'Brien, more than 1500 producers and poultry and other produce at the four permanent markets. This, he believes, is a fair average of the number who appear on market days.

If the new budget contains a fund sufficient to carry out his plans, Mr. O'Brien intends to have 24 markets in all, each enclosed with a shed.

A SOLUTION FOR CATTLE SHORTAGE

KANSAS CITY-Thomas E. Wilson of Chicago, new Head of the Morris & Co. packing interests, sees a hopeful solution for the cattle raising situation. He asserts that the outlook is encouraging because the farmers generally are pursuing the rule of more live stock and more crops. Today young Mr. Wilson declares farmers are studying, listening, learning and thinking in agricultural schools and that the farmer of the future who shows the best results will be a product of the agricultural college.

Mr. Wilson adds that we will find ANNUAL ELECTION relief from present conditions. It may be slow, but the American farmer can and will solve this problem

UNITED FRUIT RISES

There was a hesitating tendency in price movements during the early sales in the New York stock market this morning. Opening prices were fractionally under last night's closing, and a further shading took place during the first few minutes. Wheeling & Lake Erie second preferred was an exception, making a sharp advance.

Continued weakness in Baltimore & Ohio was attributed to the belief that less favorable earnings would necessitate a reduction in the dividend rate tomorrow. New York Central and Canadian Pacific also were weak.

Boston & Maine had a gain on the local exchange in the early trading. United Fruit and Shoe Machinery were up. Boston Elevated had a good gain

NEW YORK-The last week of the year showed about 40,000 tons of rails, 700 cars and 15 locomotives ordered, which is below the average week.

For the entire year, 1913 was not encouraging to equipment manufactures. It is estimated about 1,500,000 tons of rails, 115,000 cars and about 3000 locomotives were bought, compared with about 4,500,000 tons of rails, 225,000 cars and about 5000 locomotives in 1912.

There is not a company making railroad equipment now operating at more than acquipment now operating at more than of per cent of capacity, and some are run. ning even lower. The supply companies, such as Railway Steel Spring Company, American Brake Shoe & Foundry Company, etc., are not affected as much as those making new equipment, locomo-tive and car manufacturing concerns, Railroads seem determined to wait

GRAIN MARKET

C. F. & G. W. Eddy, Inc., of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, received the following from their Chicago correspondent:

Wheat-The reactionary tendency of wheat was continued during the early session but the decline did not go far and at midday had been fully recovered. Most of the selling was in sympathy with the downward trend of other grain, but it was evident that the lower cables, freer Australian and Argentine offerings together with continued satisfactory conditions in the American winter wheat belt were having more than sentimental

Corn-A very active market was wit nessed today with heavy liquidation early. Stop loss orders were reached The decline was checked by persistent absorption for the account of shorts Relative steadiness of the cash market also promoted the demand for futures but the unsettled undertone in cash circles has not been wholly eliminated Much of the bearish sentiment is based on the continuance of Argentine ments to this country. Receipts from America are of afir volume. Oats-Were weak for a time on further liquidation, and in sympathy with corn. There were some vague reports of freer country offerings. Covering of shorts caused a rally in the later trad-offerings and talk of Danubian ship-

CHICAGO-Traffic on western railroads shows no great change over the preceding week or the corresponding week of last year. There is some irregularity shown over a year ago, but Cent this is to be expected immediately following the holiday rush, but in this respect there has not been the falling off which the traffic men looked for. In every direction there is, at least senti- Col 8 mentally, a better feeling in business circles. The passage of the currency D & law has created confidence and the tendency to look for better times is growing in the West. At this early date a goodly part of the uncertainties have been removed. there is the general feeling that the railroads will at once renew their buying. In the dry goods trade there has been at the usual falling off following the holiday rush and with the road men at home for the holidays and with visiting buyers absent until after the inventors period, therefore no large run of business is looked for. Notwithstanding this, business generally is about equal to that of a year ago. In kindred lines the situation is about the same. Collections were reported fair in the western territory. The coal trade continued light over the entire western territory on account of the moderate temperatures which have prevailed and partially because of the curtailment in industrial activity. GOOD SEASON IN DRY GOODS

NEW YORK-Worth street merchants are of opinion that 1913 was a fairly good season. While the year as a whole surpassed the previous in volume of orders, and at remunerative prices, it did not equal their expectations.

But generally, the wholesalers did a sizeable trade, movement of merchandise exceeding 1912 and the book orders for 50% the new year being sufficient to encourage merchants.

Department store business, as a whole, was on a larger scale than the year before, but hardly one big department store received as much business as expected.

Of the future general opinion seems to 58% be that things will improve materially, and while the trade naturally slackens ately after the hol 91% new year will bring a better and larger business.

Lately the Local Government committee made a report upon the old mansion and decided, much to their regret, that it was impossible to preserve the building. It is therefore satisfactory to find from Mr. Phillips in a letter in the Times (London) that when he found that the house was in such a tottering condition that it could not be preserved, and was condemned by the authorities, it seemed to him that there was yet one remaining gone far, I saw a cedar waxwing high the hemlocks, a bright red berry in means whereby it might be saved, i. e., the house might be taken down in such a his feathers, and near him, bobbing his dear little bunch of olive-green feathers, manner that it could, at a later date and on some less valuable site, be rebuilt, and thus the famous eighteenth century house might live again. Protecting Income Tax Information

It is fundamental to free and frank intercourse between the people of the United States and their government that there shall be, on both sides, scrupulous regard for the equities and the moralities. The closer the government is brought into touch with the affairs of the governed the more essential it is that mutual confidence shall exist and that it shall be safeguarded at every point. Whatever the political complexion of the adminstration at Washington, the government should be the servant and the friend, and, so far as its province lies, the protector of all the people. Income tax legislation compels the revelation to federal authorities of much important private business. In the main, there is no objection to this, and can be none, so long as the privacy of these revelations is respected. The possibility that information disclosed in obedience to the income tax law would become public property has caused alarm among law-abiding investors who naturally desire to keep their private affairs to themselves. It is now announced that a ruling of the treasury department will make the continuance of this alarm wholly without cause.

Privacy is to be carefully guarded by the government in the administration of the income tax law. Only one person in the department will have a key to the system designed to prevent identification of documents. To clerks in general the taxpayer is to be simply a number, and without access to the key the number will have no meaning for those who come in contact with the returns, so far as individual identity is concerned.

It may be objected that the wealthy are over-sensitive in this regard, and that at all events the government is going to great trouble with the view of relieving bondholders of anxiety. But the point involved is of far greater importance than such contentions might imply. It is for government to deal fairly, equitably, considerately with all citizens, rich and poor. Class is not officially recognized in the United States. It has no place under the law. It is the citizen and not the wealthy man whom the government is striving to protect in this instance. It is the rights of the citizen and not the privileges of the wealthy it aims to safeguard. If there were not many and higher reasons for supporting the attitude of the government in this matter, the fact that rich and poor are constantly changing places in the United States would be a sufficient reason for insisting upon equal protection for all.

Ideal and Real in Playwriting

THE stimulating effect of amonth's residence in New York city, overseeing the production of one of his plays, has had such an effect on one of the cleverest of the younger British playwrights that he has become exuberant in praise of the freshness of the material, veracity of representation and "variety of speed in performance" of the United States plays that he has made it his professional business to see acted. This unconventionality of subject matter, treatment and method of presentation he glories in. 'dozens of ironclad rules for playmaking smashed and just because amateurs have been ignorant of conventions, plays have succeeded." So the English observer says. Indeed, he is more explicit. He denies that there is a "technique of the drama." Every plot calls for its own technique. Thus the iconoclastic individualist.

This point of view is so congenial to the North American craftsman, working in whatever artistic medium, that it may be questioned whether any advice of the kind were needed. Coming from a man of some reputation it must have some influence, and to that extent it will make more difficult the task of those persons who still insist that dramatic art is not exempt from criticism based on standards of structure, form and content quite other than the subjective notions of the individual artist-creator. His liberty to create as he pleases is not denied, but he cannot prevent objective and standardized judgment upon his work. Nor do either duty or policy dictate that he shall always experiment, always produce the novel effect or method, or always put matter above style.

If there is one encouraging aspect of the stage in the United States today it is that many aspiring youth of both sexes, who hope to become famous and rich as the writers of plays, are being subjected here and there, in one university or another, to disciplined education for their tasks; for it is from such teaching that, without losing initial enthusiasm and ambition, they come forth knowing something about the history, traditions, achievements, technical demands and necessities of the playwright's calling.

Farmers' Opportunity Marketing

IN THE flood of advice given the farmers of New England in addresses to which they listen during the season when they have leisure there is a continuing plea that they cooperate in marketing their products. The speaker at the agricultural meetings, bringing the conclusions he has reached from outside, rich in statistics and logical in deductions, tells them that it is the duty they owe themselves and the consumer alike. There is applause and a vote of thanks for the able and interesting address. Then the farmers return to their homes and proceed to attend to their affairs in the independent fashion of their fathers. There is abundant enterprise in New England agriculture. Progress is made with every year in the methods of farming, economies are practised and efficiency developed. But with all the discussion, the farmer continues individual, personally resolute but insulated.

"There is plenty of room," says the United States secretary of agriculture in his annual report, "for lowering the cost of farm" products to consumers and at the same time largely increasing the cash income per farm without increasing farm production." New England knows the spaciousness of that room. It has taken the dimensions of it in no end of discussion. But the farmer fails to move in. A generation ago the cooperative creamery was the vogue. It was approved by common sense and common experience in other lands. It came into general adoption, with the result that the quality of butter was greatly improved, the cost of its production lowered, the market and the farmer helped. The cooperative creamery is hardly known in New England today, the fine plants have passed to private control, and the former patrons are paddling their own canoes. They are good canoeists, but canoes are not good

In the Monitor of Monday was the news that, the Spokane (Wash.) farmers' union was about to establish a grain-selling agency to handle all the grain produced thereabouts, after the fashion of the North Pacific Fruit Growers Association. The fruit-selling cooperation of the Pacific slope is famously effective. Meanwhile the orchards that are being developed in New England with great enterprise will unload their trees largely for the benefit of the "long line of distributors and middlemen," to whom the secretary of agriculture traces the absorption of the benefit of great crops. The cause of the slow and halting advance of cooperative action in New England, the admission of the principle and the slight of the practise, is worthy of study. It may result from the persistence of the rugged independence typified by the canopied stone at Plymouth. That it is illogical, costly, defeats the interest of the consumer, and denies due return for his labor to the producer, are facts that are

There is nowhere a clearer need of cooperative marketing, not to mention producing, than here. Perhaps it awaits the larger ownership of the farms by the newer comers from Europe-a possibility that needs no more than to be stated to arouse the pride of New Englanders in their self-reliance. An independence of all together ought not to be impossible to the men who are naturally independent individually.

Changing

Community

of Interests

Seldom has a pat phrase, summing up a policy dominant for a season in the controlling faction of a nation, been so sharply challenged as is now the "community of interests" slogan of the past twenty years in the United States. For it an "interest of the community" theory of high finance is being forcibly substituted at the will of a strong executive and radical legislature both obedient to the people. Finding that this will is unalterable, voluntary adjustments are being made in highly articulated corporations wherein "community of interests" is still clearly operative that henceforth will no doubt be more deftly con-

Had there been more of "interest of the community" in the "community of interests" theory and practise, the present costly and disturbing process of decentralization and disjointing of a swiftly built and elaborate trading, manufacturing and banking mechanism need never have come to pass. Had social good, fair distribution of the gains accruing from administrative and operating economies, and fair play for rivals who preferred going it alone, been mixed up with the process of establishing "community of interests," there need not have been social and political overturning such as the United States has seen recently.

That along with "interest of the community" can go "community of interests," all persons know. But it is well to ask, What interests? That is the crucial question. Commercial ones cannot be ignored; but neither can they be allowed to dominate. Even were democracy in industry and trade to arrive tomorrow the supereconomic aspects of living might still be far from sound. The interests of a community cannot be defined in terms of tangible wealth. There are intellectual and moral assets to be acquired, lacking which the community is bound to toil and struggle until it gains them. They only come with freedom to think and to will and to do. The rigidity of a "trust" or a "community of interests" scheme is offensive, and always provokes revolt such as that now in evidence.

Orient Turning to Western Music

A GRADUATE of Waseda College, selected by the principal of the Tokio Music College, has been deputed by the Japanese government to proceed to Boston to study construction, tuning and other practical aspects of piano and organ manufacture and sale. That the Japanese department of agriculture and commerce assumes responsibility for the enterprise should give no cynical humorist a chance for jest. The point of the quest is unaltered. Occidental music and musical instruments are to be studied with very practical ends in view, namely to facilitate their increased use in Nippon; and this with the sanction of the state.

Gaining its musical ideals from China along with much else that is distinctively cultural, Japan in this field as in others has not been without originality. So that even prior to direct contact with the Occident she had progressed on the way toward western harmonic principles. When the doors were fully opened to the cultural acquisitions as well as practical resources and methods of Europe and America, music was not overlooked; and in consequence a native audience now awaits such musicians from Europe and the United States as from time to time find their way to Japan. It is not claimed, of course, that the characteristic Japanese quality of assimilating overseas ideas and customs and yet transcending them has gone as far in this field as it has in others; but there has been some change.

Selection of Boston as a place for making this investigation is not surprising. Historic names in the fine art of organ and piano building are part of the city's heritage from a simpler past, and worthy successors of eminent pioneers have made the contemporary world a purchaser of the output of local factories. A network of public and private agencies provides musical education, technical or popular, on a broad scale ranging from Harvard's music department to the music "settlement" of the congested tenement house region. A commissioner from Japan, on such an errand, will have a hearty welcome from a city long interested in Japan's art and religion, and anxious to serve Nippon at any time she seeks aid.

No ALARM need be felt over the recent reports to the effect that this planet is drying up. It is now determined that there are fiftysix areas in the ocean where the water is more than three miles deep, ten where it exceeds four miles and four where soundings show the bottom to be over five miles down. Almost as much nonsense is talked regarding the earth's water as the earth's fuel supply."

IF TEXAS will put the Mexican refugee militarists to work on its intensive farms it will be a good thing for the countries on both sides of the border.

THE return of "Monna Lisa" to the Louvre, and the rehanging in the Salon Carre, has been the cause of extraordinary satisfaction to the Parisians. In a sort of way no such excitement has been caused in any city by an individual picture since Cimabue's "Madonna" was carried in procession through the streets of Florence. Even now, however, such is the distrust which is growing in men's minds on the subject of the identification of art treasures, that there are those who still think that the lady of the Salon Carre is a counterfeit, and that the original is in London or New York, or some other of the innumerable haunts of the gallery pirates. There are far more great pictures which have been abducted by the pirates than the public realizes. There is Plimmer's miniature of Dimsdale, stolen out of the National Gallery, and Holbein's "Anne of Cleves," stolen from a private house in London. What has become of the two Reynolds which disappeared from the Townsend collection, or the Frans Hals which was removed from the Antwerp exhibition, no man knows; yet these are only some of the depredations of the present century.

As to the Return 'Monna Lisa'

It is not to be wondered that there should be Frenchmen who shake their heads as they stand opposite the prodigal "Gioconda." They remember that famous Grecian crown which found its way into the Louvre, to say nothing of "Monna Lisa's" waxen sister in Berlin. They remember that cryptic utterance of John Ruskin, "Go to a canvas maker," when he was asked if a certain old master was a genuine one, and the half cynical, half amused rider, "I can only tell you if it is a good picture." Already, therefore, they are beginning to shake their heads, and the enterprising exploiter has before him an opportunity for the perpetration of a new edition of Gainsborough's "Blue Boy" with the endless possibilities of confusion attached to it.

"La Gioconda" is just 413 years of age, and the centuries, so far from making ravages on, have simply mellowed her beauty. She cost Francois I. just 4000 golden crowns and she came to France quite honestly, and after the revolution took up her abode in the Louvre. This is more than can be said for a good many other pictures which found temporary shelter in the great gallery. Napoleon, unlike Vincenzo Perugia, did not trouble about false bottomed trunks at the frontier. He swept the masterpieces of other countries into Paris in cartloads, with the result that when after his fall the other nations put in their demands for their own, no less than 2065 masterpieces were returned to fourteen different states. In those days "Monna Lisa" was residing at Versailles, where she had been removed by the Grand Monarque from Francois' "Gilt Cabinet," at Fontainebleau. The return of the Napoleonic loot reduced the gallery of the Louvre to such an ebb that it had temporarily to be closed, but "La Gioconda" had then moved from Versailles to the capital, and has remained there ever since, until her recent excursion to her native city.

It has been truthfully remarked time and again that girls in these days are just as capable as were girls in other days, and no less truthful is the statement, frequently and courageously made by some of their elders capable of judging, that in many respects the girls of this period are more capable than were any who have preceded them. The difference between the girl of the past and the girl of the period is that the latter does Getting Back to Darning not, and does not have to, work along the lines followed by the former. The demands upon her are very different from those that came to her great-grandmother, her grandmother or even her mother. Her own needs and the needs of those around her are different. She works to entirely different ends, and, in the main, in an entirely different manner.

Some of the most beautiful needlework ever turned out is the product of woman's hands today. We find an article in the household department of the Monitor beginning with the assertion that the girl of the period "can embroider beautifully enough to adorn a robe for Queen Mab herself," and this as a general statement is true. The fingers of girls' hands were never more delicate and deft than they are today, feminine taste was never more refined, feminine fondness for the beautiful in art was never more intense. The Monitor's sentence continues, however, "but what can she do when it comes to the humble task of darning?" And the article immediately tells her how to darn, in case she doesn't know.

For the average girl, darning in its serious aspect, like many other things in their serious aspects, is put off until such time as it will become part of her duty. Whether she will meet her responsibility then in this particular is a question that can be best answered by pointing to her immediate predecessor, her mother. It is, we believe, a fair conclusion to draw from average experience that in the proportion women are capable, adept, expert in some particulars are they capable, adept and expert in others. That is to say, assuming that much darning is to be done in the future by the girls of the period, it is safe to say, judging from the past, that the girls who are able to embroider royal robes are the girls who may be depended upon to do good jobs of darning on the heels or the toes of stockings or socks. We venture to say that there never was a first-class embroiderer who was not also a tip-top darner.

One of the latest alleged discoveries of the learned investigators is an Eskimo tribe having longer backbones than any other known people. It is unnecessary to say, perhaps, that if humanity has any need in this respect just now it is not longer but stiffer back-
